Roadside distraction

Russian commuters may have gotten more than they expected on their way to work last week. Drivers in downtown Moscow were greeted by a different sort of advertising than they were used to, as an electronic highway billboard was seen displaying a pornographic video instead of its regularly programmed advertising, reported The Associated Press. The two-minute clip, depicting an unnamed couple's explicit escapades, blazed across the 9-by-6-metre screen, slowing traffic on one of the Russian capital's busiest roads. Many people gathered to take pictures, while others like Alyona Prokulatova, were too offended to even do so.

"[I was] so shocked that I couldn't even shoot video or take a picture of it," Prokulatova said.

Owners of the billboard believe hackers are to blame for the surprising interference. Police are investigating the incident, but no suspects have been named thus far.

Man's Breast Friend

Cosmetic surgery for dogs?

A group of retired rescue dogs recently underwent the canine equivalent of breast reduction surgery, reported the Telegraph.

The black Labradors, owned by kennel in Brentwood, England, needed to enhance their declining looks if they wanted to be adopted.

After years of over-breeding, the dogs were left with huge, sagging teats, which even touched the ground, and prevented them from finding a suitable home until now said Wallace Kennels.

"It didn't look very nice and people just could not see past that - you could see it in their faces," said shelter co-ordinator Teresa Bartholomew.

The surgery appeared to be a success, as the dogs found suitable homes mere weeks after the surgery was completed.

Dog lovers can be so fickle.

The race is over.
