Brotherhood of the Saggy Pants

History has often shown that suppression inspires creativity. So when a Florida municipality decided to ban the wearing of saggy pants on city property, residents Tyrone Henry and Fermin Eason knew exactly what to do. The two men set about designing a set of pants to help fellow underwear-exposing leg-wear aficionados practice their love in public, without facing police scrutiny, reported ABA Journal.

The concept is a pair of pants on which one side permanently gives the appearance that they are in danger of falling down and exposing the wearer's briefed buttocks, and on the other are normal dress pants. The reversible trousers are in fact fastened securely at the wearer's waistline, so no harm, no foul. "You can wear them as a normal uniform pants, and if you want to hang out after school, you can get your swag on, flip them over and do your thing," explained Henry.

Probably the most impressive part about the product is that it has recently been patented. The men have since begun their own company, Waistline Fashion, with their slogan "Fashion is not a crime," and hopes to produce the pants for the mass market. The controversy over the droopy drawers still continues, with one Florida Judge ruling that the saggy pants ban has "violated the constitution."

Expect even more controversy when the Florida courts discover that "saggy" isn't even a real word.

Province spends $40M on Lynn Lake Rehab

Courtesy of CBC News Thursday, November 18

The province says it will spend $40 million to rehabilitate seven abandoned mines around the town of Lynn Lake in northern Manitoba.

After a number of mining companies departed from their operations there about 10 years ago, the area was left with toxic sites and thousands of workers without jobs.

would mean a whole new lifeblood pumped into town that's for sure," he said. "Everybody is looking forward to getting back to work."

"When they left, they left in a hurry and they left quite a mess," said Mayor Sean Maher.

Maher said despite this, the area is still rich in copper, gold and nickel.

Canadian Winter Spiced Honey Banana Cake

- Equipment
- 8" x 8" pan • three mixing bowls • electric mixer • spoon
- 4 Tbsp butter
3/4 cup sugar or dark honey
1 egg, lightly beaten
1 tsp vanilla
1 - 1/2 cups flour
3 tsp baking powder
1 tsp baking soda
1/4 tsp salt
1/8 tsp ginger
1/8 tsp cinnamon
1/8 tsp nutmeg
1 - 1/4 cups very ripe bananas, mashed
1/2 cup chopped nuts
1 cup raisins

Instructions

Preheat oven to 350° F (180° C); grease and flour an 8" x 8" cake pan. Cream butter and sugar/honey together and add lightly beaten egg and vanilla. In another bowl, mix flour with baking powder, baking soda, salt and spices. Add the butter mixture to the flour mixture, alternating with the mashed banana. Mix in the nuts and raisins (and/or other dried fruit to your taste). Bake for 50 to 60 minutes. Wrap well and keep in cold storage.
